LITTLE THEATERS

Should not the little theater in its best estate represent rather a frame scientific men and especially among mentioned above or by myself person- of mind than architectural proportions? Is not the little theater symbolical in that it is no more than the ernment, so that we sailed north with outward and visible sign of some mental state?

In this country little theaters were meant to occupy toward the regular playhouses a position similar to that in which in the '90s the free stagus of experiments in Wisconsin and Minnesota. But the apex of her artistic structure is still missing. She urged the founding of a national theater in New York which should annually act the best of these dramas.

Less local has been the aim of the little playhouses, half amateur, now scattered from one end of the country to the other. In the interpretation of Dunsany, Galsworthy, Chekoff, Dreiser, or whoever happened to appeal to the directors the talents of local painters and actors have of course been utilized. have sounded the channels between many of the previously known CanaTo the Editor of The Christian Science cases little or no accent on the national phase of the productions. Some But there has been in the majority of tional phase of the productions. Some have developed more or less ambitious schemes of mise en scène that have carried their fame abroad. Original plays in one act have borne proof of the inventiveness of local authors. Some of the theaters have been a means of social diversion, while others have been all art for art. Everywhere, however, these institutions have testified to a lively interest in the activities of the theater.

But the little theaters of New York have known during recent years no suitableness of the play to a small frame. Yet even with this latitude they have not shown signs of prosperity. Winthrop Ames' beautiful little playhouse has been closed for two years. It should always be kept open, if merely to prove what taste plish. One other little theater that has known seasons of great prosperity is open now only intermittently. A third is fortunate in this season having achieved a record of constant employment. Two others lying far from the theater district have been open from time to time to their particular public.

Yet it is not difficult to see that the metropolis is less congenial to the prosperity of the little theater than smaller towns are. Those which really represent a state of mind here do continue to interest their small clientele. But there has been ample evidence that the theatergoing public generally does not enjoy the little theater. Other strong nations will rush in and establish their dominion, if we lose the protection of the British fleet and army. The British conquest was certainly a misfortune, but that is now a matter of history. We have to face the present world-situation and to work for the future. Many institutions, which owe their origin to the vices and passions of former generations, can and should be maintained and developed in a different spirit. It is not necessary to begin again at the starting point, simply because an institution cannot be historically justified. We have learned to know the English, and our status in the Empire is improving in each decade. It would therefore be foolish to expose the country to the risk of convulsions and invasions. For who knows what will come out of the turmoil? Secret Developments

Hints were given in the British Parliament of a few developments which have secretly been brought about in England. One machine mentionedthough not by name-was the Tarrant biplane, which has five Rolls-Royce engines, and at a speed of 100 miles per hour is capable of carrying 20,000 pounds. Another type of craft which is being kept secret, and of which even Parliament was given little information, is a novelty from which almost a revolution of aeronautics is expected. Its essential factor is speed; so far, its practicability or utility has not been proved, but the experts are, to say the least, profoundly optimistic of its prospects. The perfection of wireless telephony was also spoken of by General Seely. Success has so far been obtained that conversations are alleged to have been carried on at a distance of 160 miles apart. Such is the story of British aviation, so far as it affects the coming international fight for commer-

Captain Ladoux on his left at the opening of the trial was in military uniform and, looking sharply through his pince-nez all the time, wore a very worried look. He had a very different appearance from that with which many of his intimates are most familiar, that of a bearded man, of no very trim arrangement, and generally wearing a hard felt hat. During the war he was chief of the Intelligence Department of the Second Bureau. He was arrested at the beginning of this year on the charge of complicity of commerce with the enemy, and was later accused of the manipulation of a document that disappeared.

Is Still Large BOSTON, Massachusetts - Increasing interest is being taken in both railroad stocks and bonds. The early convening of Congress, the belief that substantial relief will be afforded the roads may have a good deal to do with the better demand for the rail issues. The railroad bond group, however, seems to have attracted less attention than the railroad stocks. Although the mortgage issues of the soundest systems are regarded as the safest from the investment point of view, the low prices and high yield offered by some of the junior bonds of the standard roads offer possibility for speculative profits.

BEACON

A Country-City Boarding and Day School for Boys and Girls.

Bencon School is established not only for the purpose of imparting the highest educational ideals but for the upbuilding of character. It has been incorporated in order that it may as an organization more efficiently carry out this purpose and work.

The school is co-educational. We believe in co-education because the associa-m of boys and girls in work, study, and play tends to broaden their conception the natural relations in social life.

Opportunity is offered during the five school days for recreation with play-med apparatus, clay modeling, arts and crafts roller skating, swimming, and seback riding.

The school is an unusual combination of the advantages of the city and the joy of life in the country. The city school home is located in a most attractive residential section. Hillsview, the country estate of the school, is situated in the Blue Hills. Special arrangements may be made for day pupils to enjoy the farm and all school activities. Children are taken throughout the summer at Hillsview.

A Comparative Exhibit

The exhibition at Macbeth's, which is the most comprehensive and informative one of the sort now on view in New York, has been arranged, aided by loans from private collections, with special reference to the fact that the College Art Association and the American Federation of Arts are both meeting in New York this week in annual convention. The idea is to show in a concrete and summary way, the progressive development of our best American painters, from the Hudson River group of Colman, Gifford, Hart, Smillie, W. T. Richards, David Johnson, and Jervis McEntee to Murphy, Melchers, Hawthorne, Hassam, Dewing, Charles H. Davis, and Elliott Daingerfield of Twentieth Century today. #### "It Shall Be Ours!"

It is quite impossible to assess the outlook of a nation in dollars or drachmæ. The unknown quantity named sentiment, so apparently omitted from the calculations of the foreign office or the counting house, has a way of asserting itself, in the most unexpected and, for that natter, undesired manner, to the no slight discomfiture of the diplomatist or the merchant. It was all very well for Carlyle to fulminate against sentimentalism as a twin sister to cant, but it is not always so very easy to draw. the line between sentiment and sentimentalism. And, ndeed, in any case generalities are themselves only too easily capable of being classified with cant. The revolt from optimism is pessimism, or vice versa. The Psalmist, in his haste, would have cut short Diogenes' search before his lantern was lighted. It threatens to be like that with the diplomatists in Paris weighing the claims of the countrymen of the famous cynic out of Pontus. Item, as the Elizabethan might have said, the Dodec-

Everybody, who has not slept through the war, knows the story of the twelve islands, with their islets, the sporades the early Greeks called them, which huddle along the coast of Asia Minor, from Samos on the north To Crete in the south. Centuries ago, so the geologists. declare, these fragments were torn from the mainland by ome terrific volcanic action, and flung out into the sea. Today the valleys, where the dinosaur once gamboled, and the elephant had his home, form the bed of what the Romans called the Ægæum Mare, whilst their peaks and plateaux, thrust up out of the blue waters, constitute the chain of islands, hoary with myth and fable, sung of by the poets of all the ages, and famous in the chronicles of the world.

When Argive Helen's face had "launched a thousand ships," not a few of these came from the Twelve Islands. And in the Iliad you may read, unto this day, the names of the kings who sailed in "the hollow ships well-ordered to the seas," when the great fleet of Agamemnon set its course for Ilium. Here, high over the roofs of Rhodes, towered the Colossus, whose thumb, it is said, a man could barely circle with both arms, and in the gleaming nirror, bound upon whose breast, the human pygmies in the streets below could see reflected the triremes and fishing boats tugging for the harbor. Here, too, appropriately enough, was wrought in marble, in the workhop of some unknown master, that glory of the Vatican galleries, the story of Laocoon. When Olympus was still a reality to men, the islands chose from the gods their tutelary deities. Thus Leros, the home of birds, to whose fields the sisters of Meleager, turned into guineaowl, were to fly for safety, adopted as its guardian Apollo's sister, the huntress, Artemis. Kalimnos and Astropalia, like Rhodes, took the sun-god himself, but the rock of Nisyros preferred Poseidon whom the Roman called Neptune, for had not Poseidon himself torn it off from Kos, so that he might hurl it at the giant Polybotes? As for Kos, to it came one night a shipwrecked son of nedicine, in whose chambers Lucian was one day to see the priests stealing and eating the sacred peas.

Thus the Dodecanese, Greek in every fiber, emerges at of the twilight between myth and history? And as the procession of the centuries advances the story is still the same. When the Latin triumphed over the Greek, the islands were crushed under the heel of Rome. Patmos, for some reason, became a penal colony, to which one day was to come the author of the Apocalypse to triumph over a legally intended death. Of all the islands Kos alone escaped the terrible exactions of the Roman taxgatherer. It owed its immunity to the fame of the greateschool founded by Hippocrates, a school to which the savants and students of Rome flocked in hundreds. And though today the once stately Asklepicion is a ruined ruin, the uge plane tree, which for twenty-five centuries has been putting on and off its leaves, and under whose shade the great Greek wrote and lectured, still survives, its hoary limbs supported on marble props.

It was not, however, until some eleven hundred years after Hippocrates, to be exact, in 730 A. D., that the islands became known by their present title. The Roman Empire had been split in two. Gregory the Third was Pope. The throne of the Cæsars had been removed to Constantinople, and Leo, the Isaurian, ruled the Byzantine Empire. The Hellenic world had come into its own again, and the new military province of the Dodecanese was established, with Rhodes for its capital. Then, again, as the Eastern Empire toppled to its fall, came the centuries of the pirates and the raiders. One after mother the ships of the Saracens, the Venetians, the Genoese, and the Algerians came plundering, murdering, and enslaving, and the Venetians were the worst of all. Patmos, indeed, was left a naked rock, till the Greek came back to repeople it. At last there appeared a new onqueror, the famous Knights Hospitalers. The islands became a vast fortress against the corsairs preying on the eastern trade-routes, and more particularly a breakwater against the tide of Muhammadan conquest. At noon, on. the 29th day of May, 1453, Muhammad the Second rode through the breach into the Greek city of Constantinople, and the work of massacre began. The horror of that day has never been forgotten, and every Easter the Greek maidens of the Dodecanese sing the Dirge of the City of Constantine, with its refrain, "Once fore in years, in times to come, it shall be ours. Still the Ottoman tide crept ever nearer. On July the 28th, 1522, the armada of Suleiman the Magnificent anchored of Rhodes. Five months later, on Christmas day, after heroic and historic struggle, Adam de Lisle and his Kuights surrendered. The terms of the capitulation were generous, and the Dodecanese became an autonomous province, under Ottoman suzerainty.

An autonomous province under Turkish suzerainty is, however, a comparative term. Still, on the whole, the Dodecaneseans maintained their liberties, and regained much of their old prosperity, in the centuries which followed. Still, when, almost exactly three hundred years after the capture of Rhodes, the Peloponnesus and the Isthmus flared up in rebellion against the nameless atrocities of the Turk, the Dodecanesean's threw in their lot with that of their fellow countrymen. From then on there followed an ever-renewing struggle with Constantinople, during which, in spite of many reverses, the Islanders held their own. So it was when, in 1912, Italy declared war against Turkey, with the result that, for the second time in their history, the islands passed under the control of Rome. Of the effect of that control there is much to be said, and much that must be said hereafter. But the main point, for the present purpose, is that these Islanders, Greek in every fiber of their being, and Greek in spite of the many vicissitudes of their history, have been once more threatened with an alien flag. The Italian flag waves, as once the pharos of Rhodes lifted itself, above that city. But the people demand their right of selfdetermination, and were it not for the example of Shantung it would be unbelievable that they could be denied it. It is true that inspired paragraphs have been issued from Paris to the effect that the islands are to be returned to Greece. But the inspired paragraph frequently gets no further than the inspiration. Therefore it is perhaps time that all that is freedom-loving in the world made clear its determination that Shantung shall not be repeated in the Dodecanese.

Solution of the Railroad Problem

COMPLETE and comprehensive public regulation of the railroads of the United States, with the properties owned and managed privately, is, stating it briefly, the solution proposed by Walker D. Hines, Director-General of Railroads under the existing war-time régime. In discussing the railway problem recently, Mr. Hines made it clear that he does not favor any plan of government ownership of the railroads, and it is to render unnecessary any such taking over of the railway properties, either now or at any future time, that he urges the immediate formulation of a plan similar to the one he recommends. The Director-General insists, no doubt with full realization that he will receive almost unanimous popular support in his contention, that a return of the railway properties to their owners under the conditions of management and control which existed prior to the war cannot be seriously considered. Such a course, he points out, would eventuate, within a comparatively short time, in actual government ownership, with what he regards as its unavoidable attendant evils.

Mr. Hines, in discussing conditions of management and control existent before the taking over of the railways by the government as a war measure, points out that gross inequalities and inequities resulted from the attempted regulation of rates, both passenger and freight, by federal and state boards and commissions, which often reached their decisions without a full knowledge of the condition or value of the properties affected. The attempted regional regulation of rates resulted, he asserts, in great hardship to what he terms the weaker railways, while at the same time permitting the earning of excessive profits by the stronger companies, or those whose lines were, because of natural advantages, able to operate at a less cost per mile. Thus it is that he has come to the count where he tayors the compulsory consolidation of the railroads of the United States into a few large competitive systems.

This is, of course, getting almost as far away from , public ownership as it is possible to get, and the plan proposed appears to be designed, as Mr. Hines claims it is, to insure against what he considers an unmistakable tendency toward government ownership under conditions as they formerly existed, and as they will exist in the future if a return to those conditions is to be permitted. He would provide, in these proposed regional railway systems, in each of which there should, he says; be from twelve to twenty consolidated competing companies, for the protection of what he calls the weaker railways, and also, by fundamental and courageous changes, for the regulation of tariffs in such a manner that capital would be attracted and the rights of shippers and other patrons of the railroads would be safeguarded. He expresses the belief that, for many years to come, upward of a billion dollars must annually be provided for investment." in railway properties in the United States, and that this investment must be made attractive. This can be done, he insists, and an income of approximately 41/2 per cent be assured, while permitting no advance in the existing

The Director-General's plan, then, is, in addition to the proposed compulsory consolidation of the carriers of the several sections, to fix tariffs, both passenger and freight, upon the basis of the true value of the combined properties, found, presumably, by actual surveys and valuations, and to limit and insure a net return upon this value of 41/2 or 5 per cent, with 1 per cent additional to be reinvested in the properties, but not capitalized. This, it is argued, will supply a definiteness heretofore lacking, and will, at the same time, allay the unrest, generally felt, that railroads have invested in their properties large amounts of excess profits, which were added to the total values of those properties, and were, in consequence, made the basis of future rates and earnings.

Mr. Hines, quite properly, it would seem, emphasizes the assertion that the solution of the railway problem does not lie in simply returning the properties to the control of their owners. The heavy costs of building, maintenance, and operation which have been imposed tipon the railroads as a result of the war will not, he says, be eliminated by this transfer of control. He points to the significant fact that the difficulties which have come upon the railroads as an outgrowth of the war have come, as well, upon those businesses and industries which have not been under government control. The opportunity seems now to be present to deal with the railway problem courageously and wisely. A solution must undoubtedly be found for conditions now existing and which, Mr. Hines believes, will continue to exist without the adoption of a plan similar to that which he advances. This plan, if it is designed to protect the public and the investors, as on its face it appears to be, should receive unbiased consideration at the hands of Congress.

Aviation in the United States

* AIR mail service, between several of the principal cities of the United States, has become quite an everyday affair. The completion of a year of such service between Washington, Philadelphia, and New York, announced within a few days, is especially interesting because of certain details, contained in the report on the subject by the Post Office Department, which provide a concrete survey of results of an attempt to maintain a daily service over considerable distances amid all sorts of conditions. The department evidently regards the government's first year of aerial mail service a success. It points out that, while the revenues from aeroplane mail stamps amounted to $159,700, the cost of the service was only $137,900.06, although whether or not the fact that the flying operations were conducted by the War Department from the inauguration of the service to Aug. 10 had anything to do with the economic results is not made clear by published accounts.

After having heard much about the niceties of aeroplane construction, and of the very limited term of usefulness of aerial motors, it is somewhat reassuring to learn, for instance, that the same planes with which the New York-Washington mail service was established are still doing duty, apparently as efficiently as ever, and propelled by the same motors. One aeroplane has traveled 10,716 miles, and during the year has had repairs calling for $480. The plane has cost the government, in service, per hour, $65.80. Another machine has traveled 15,018 miles, has had repairs requiring $1874.76, and has cost, in service, per hour, $48.34. The department reports that the record of the entire service between New York and Washington for the year shows 92 per cent of performance, representing 7,720,840 letters carried.

In connection with the carrying of the mails, the Post Office Department has made studies which, it would seem, will be quite helpful in advancing commercial aviation generally. One of these is to determine whether or not visibility is absolutely necessary to commercial flying. Some improvement in instruments has been effected in this connection, and the interesting announcement is made that aeronautical engineers are working on a device for the automatic landing of a mechanically flown aeroplane which would meet the condition of absolute invisibility that could exist only in the most blinding snowstorm or impenetrable fog." The report points out that the objection to aviators flying with single-motor planes when the degree of visibility is low is the possibility of the motor stopping over a city, village, or other section which would admit of no selection of a suitable landing place. It is, the Post Office Department says, generally accepted that, with two or more motors, forced landings under such conditions can be avoided. It seems clear that the mail service is working out important problems of this sort which, in some degree, stand in the way of progress toward practical commercial aviation.

The Azores

THERE are many places up and down the earth's surface that, through some notable incident, have had greatness thrust upon them, greatness which otherwise might not have come their way. St. Helena without Napoleon, Trafalgar Bay without Nelson, Juan Fernandez without Robinson Crusoe would, in all probability, have had a very attenuated acquaintance list compared with what they have today. The Azores do not, of course, come quite into the same category, for the trailing group of the Western Islands which spread themselves along some two hundred miles of the mid-Atlantic would, in any event, have been well known. Nevertheless, most English-speaking people, today, know the Azores best as the place where the doughty Sir Richard Grenville fought the famous battle, "the one and the fifty-three," with the Spanish Fleet, over three hundred years ago.

At Flores in the Azores Sir Richard Grenville lav. And a pinnace, like a flutter'd bird, came flying from far away: "Spanish ships of war at sea! we have sighted fifty-three!"

So opens one of the best-known ballads in the language, and the rest of the story is equally familiar; how Lord Thomas Howard, who was chief in command of the small British squadron of six ships, decided that, in this case, discretion was the better part of valor; how he informed Sir Richard Grenville, commander of the Revenge, to this effect; how Sir Richard pointed out that many of his men were ashore and that he could not desert them. And so, as Gervase Markham briefly tells the story in the "argument" to his poem, "The Most Honourable Tragedie of Sir Richard Grinuile, Knight," with which Tennyson was, of course, familiar, "Sir Richard, staying to recover his men which were upon the Island, and disdayning to flie from his Countries enemy, not being able to recover the winde, was instantly invironed with that huge Navie, between whom began a dreadful fight, continuing the space of fifteen hours, in which conflict, Sir Richard sunck the great San Phillip of Spaine, the Ascention of Sivel, the Admirall of the Hulks and two other great Armados." Sir Richard continued the fight, "till he had not one corne of powder left, nor one whole pike, nor fortie living men," and then, at last, he himself being wounded, his master, much against his will, came "to composition with the Spanyards." And so the lion "was caught at last," but the little Revenge was not after all to be a Spanish prize, for that evening a great storm arose

And the whole sea plunged and fell on the shot-shatter'd navy of Spain, And the little Revenge herself went down by the island crags To be lost evermore in the main.

That all happened in the year 1591, when Queen Elizabeth sought to support Don Antonio of Portugal against Spain by dispatching her ships to the Azores, then in the possession of her implacable enemy Philip II. They had other objects in view, of course, these ships, for the Azores, lying directly in the great sea lane, between the Indies and Spain, were steadily developing into a grand rendezvous for the Spanish treasure chips on their way back to Europe.

At that time the Azores had been scarcely 200 years on the map of the known world, and but little more than a hundred years within the world's ordinary sea traffic. It was the famous Prince Henry the Navigator, of Portugal, who first caused them to be thoroughly explored, about the middle of the Fifteenth Century. Colonization was then begun, and Flemish settlers came from the Netherlands in great numbers, so much so, indeed, that the islands were, for a time, called the Flemish Islands. The year 1580 brought the Spanish conquest and for sixty years the Azores, like the rest of Portugal, were under the dominion of Spain. Then they were restored to Portugal again, and have remained a Portuguese possession ever since. The Azores are one of the most isolated groups of islands in the world, for the nearest continental land is Cape Roca, on the Portuguese coast, 830 miles away, whilst Cape Race, in Newfoundland, the nearest American headland, lies 1200 miles to

Notes and Comments

Sometimes it seems to be the case that people in the United States become enthusiastic supporters of the Americanization idea without any definite notion of how to carry it into effect. Perhaps they might take a cue from a Polish settlement worker who, in the course of a single week, secured fifty students for the citizenship and language courses in the Chicago evening schools. Even the school experts have been wondering what to do in order to induce foreigners resident in American cities to attend the evening classes that have been established primarily for their benefit, and it looks as it the Polish settlement worker had found the answer. After all, he was merely adopting the methods prescribed by good salesmanship. He had a good thing, and he merely adopted the most direct course for bringing it to the attention of the people who had need of it. They

Nobody is likely to dispute the idea that at no time ! since the invention of printing has so large a number of books been subjected to such hard service as the immense and miscellaneous library that was part and parcel of military life in France and Belgium. The American Library Association placed in active service some 5,000,-000 volumes contributed and about 2,000,000 purchased in the United States, but the supply never equaled the demand. More books are now needed, and the need will continue as long as American soldiers remain in Europe, increased rather than diminished in proportion as the occupation of territory to secure the terms of peace leaves more time for reading. During the war countless books were lost, books not lost wore out seven times faster than in ordinary library circulation, and the army as a whole acquired a reading habit that should prove a national asset worth many times the cost of the books. With a new campaign impending to secure books for soldiers, these are facts that should make the average citizen glad to contribute.

To Persons interested in legal procedure the State Legislature of Michigan has done an interesting thing in making it lawful for courts of record to render binding "declarations of rights," for by this process legal questions can be submitted to the courts without the delay and expense of the usual method of "trying a case," and. as it were, arbitrated by the judges. In many cases a humanly more wholesome method, this process proceeds on the assumption that each person concerned is honest in intention and will be satisfied with a just settlement. The plan is ancient; it dates back to Roman law, and is today employed in the settlement of a majority of cases having to do with contracts, deeds, wills, and so on, in England. But it has not, it seems, before been employed in the United States, and now that one state has led the way, others will no doubt gradually follow until an important change in legal procedure has come about in the

THE community center is almost a discovery of today in America, but the idea, according to a recent article on western railroad history, was introduced practically some twenty-one years ago, to provide for the normal social content of railroad workers in an almost unsettled country. The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad Company established a system of reading-rooms and clubhouses for its men at all the important division headquarters and terminals, and as more people have come into the country, these places have come to be used also by the families of the men, and are now, to quite an extent, community centers in the present use of the term. Other reading-rooms have been established in towns along the line, and their effect for the betterment of local living was already proving the value of the community center before the country in general had ever heard of it.

A PLEASANT scene of family activity, a gentleman and his wife and a robin and his mate working together to make a bird's nest, is happily described by an Illinois citizen in a letter to a Chicago newspaper. It was a blowy day, and Mr. and Mrs. Robin, trying to build a nest on a fence post, were having trouble with the foundations. So the worthy gentleman and his wife came to their assistance, he with bits of moss and she with several lengths of white cotton string, which is "an orthodox part of every robin's nest." Together the human nestbuilders made the foundations fast to the post, and were rather surprised to see that the robins regarded it as good work so far as it went. Mrs. Robin improved it by tucking in all the loose ends of cotton string, added the finishing touches, and the Robin family settled down in their new house for the summer. And now the gentleman wonders whether he is not the "first person who ever made a nest for a bird and had it accepted." As very likely he is, at least of the real bird's kind.
